

CALL FOR PAPERS

Call for submission of manuscripts for the journal Analysis and Modification of Behaviour on the psychological implications of the COVID-19 pandemic.

The COVID-19 pandemic has caused a major global health crisis with marked repercussions in other areas, such as the economy. Also, the future seems uncertain until a clearly effective vaccine and treatment would be available. This circumstance affects both the physical and psychological levels of wellbeing. Thus, researchers in the field of psychology have a lot to contribute in this situation. In this sense, this call for submission of manuscripts is presented.

The purpose of this special issue is to encourage and publish new research on the psychological implications of the pandemic crisis. Specially, empirical assessment and intervention works are welcomed, as well as theoretical reviews or proposals that shed light on the psychological aspects derived from a pandemic with the characteristics of COVID-19.

Manuscripts may include, among other topics, the following ones:

- Epidemiological studies on the psychological consequences of the pandemic (stress, anxiety, depression...).
- Coping styles during confinement or other circumstances related to the pandemic.
- Psychological implications of physical or social distancing, isolation or loneliness.
- Psychological factors associated with compliance with recommended preventive measures.
- Psychological implications of the labour consequences of the pandemic crisis.
- The role of culture in the mental health response to the COVID-19 pandemic.
- Psychological implications of the pandemic in older people.
- Psychological implications in people who have worked on the front line.
- Protective factors in the mental health response to the COVID-19 pandemic.
- Psychological consequences of the measures adopted with the pandemic in children and young people.
- Psychological vulnerability based on different variables (employment situation, migrants or refugees, with previous psychological disorders, etc.).
- Beliefs about COVID-19.

Nevertheless, other types of studies are also welcomed, in line with the guidelines of the journal Analysis and Behaviour Modification.

Languages: Spanish, English or Portuguese.

Submission deadline: October 31, 2020.